// THE PHILOSOPHY OF CHURRASCO

Brazilian churrasco is not a technique — it is a ceremony. The churrasceiro is not merely a cook; they are a keeper of fire, a sculptor of smoke, and a guardian of tradition stretching back centuries to the gauchos of Rio Grande do Sul. Each cut of meat tells a different story: the rich marbling of picanha, the slow-rendered tenderness of costela, the snap of linguiça skin over open flame.

This guide exists to protect that story. Every prep time, every temperature guide, every service script is in service of one goal: when a guest sits at your table, they should feel they are in Brazil — not a facsimile of it.

Fire is your primary ingredient. Respect it. Learn it. Master it. Everything else follows.

— Execute with intention. Every plate is a performance.

// CORE OPERATIONAL PRINCIPLES

- 1. Fire First: The churrasco fire must be started 90 minutes before service. Hardwood charcoal only — no lighter fluid, ever.
- 2. Salt Discipline: Picanha takes coarse rock salt only. Applied at skewer, not marinade. Shaken off before service.
- 3. Costela Commitment: Short ribs enter the slow cooker at 09:00 without exception. 7-hour cook is non-negotiable.
- 4. The Skewer Technique: Hold skewer vertically at table height. Slice thin against the grain directly onto guest's plate. Control the pour — guests signal with palm-down (stop) or palm-up (more).
- 5. Feijoada Fridays: Begin feijoada by 11:00. It cannot be rushed. Pre-sell begins Thursday evening service.

- 1 Combine tapioca flour, salt, and butter in a mixing bowl. Blend until crumbly.
- 2 Warm milk to 70°C and pour over flour mixture. Mix vigorously until dough forms.
- 3 Add eggs one at a time, then fold in grated cheese. Rest dough 5 minutes.
- 4 Roll into 30g balls. Bake at 200°C for 15–18 minutes until golden and puffed.

5 Serve immediately in a lined basket — they deflate within 4 minutes of coming out.

Chef's Tip: Double-batch the dough in the morning and refrigerate unbaked balls. Fire to order for table-fresh delivery every service.

- 1 Pull pre-formed coxinha from refrigerated mise en place. Verify shape integrity.
- 2 Dip in egg wash, then roll firmly in fine breadcrumbs. Double-coat for extra crunch.
- 3 Fry at 175°C for 4–5 minutes until deep golden brown.
- 4 Drain on wire rack for 60 seconds. Plate on banana leaf liner with lime wedge.

Chef's Tip: Form coxinha in bulk during morning prep. Refrigerate on trays lined with parchment — they hold 48 hours raw, ready to fry to order in under 6 minutes.

Bolinho de Bacalhau

Bolinho de Bacalhau — Salt Cod Fritter

- 1 Render bacon in a dry pan until crispy. Remove and reserve.
- 2 Add butter to pan, sauté diced onion and garlic until golden.
- 3 Pour in cassava flour. Toast on medium heat, stirring constantly, 4–5 minutes until sandy and fragrant.
- 4 Fold bacon back in. Serve warm alongside any main as a side, or as a standalone entrée.

Chef's Tip: Farofa is your highest-margin item at 10% FC. Push it as a table side — it pairs with everything and guests love the texture contrast.

Vinagrete

- 1 Dice tomato, onion, and green pepper into fine, uniform 5mm cubes — precision matters here.
- 2 Combine in bowl. Season with salt and let sit 2 minutes to macerate.
- 3 Dress with red wine vinegar and olive oil. Toss with fresh parsley.
- 4 Serve immediately in a small ramekin alongside the meat spread.

Chef's Tip: Pre-batch vinaigrette in the morning but hold the dressing. Dress per order to prevent sogginess — this is your second-highest margin entrée at 9% FC.

- 1 Trim hearts, remove any fat caps or connective tissue. Rinse cold and pat dry.
- 2 Marinate in garlic, lime, and salt for minimum 2 hours (overnight is better).
- 3 Thread 6–8 hearts per skewer, leaving slight gaps for even heat penetration.
- 4 Grill over high direct heat, 250°C+, 3–4 minutes per side until charred exterior, pink-tender interior.
- 5 Serve on skewer, tableside. Educate guests — this is a true gaucho staple.

Chef's Tip: Coração is the conversation starter. Brief servers to introduce it with confidence — "This is what every churrasco master eats first at the fire." Curiosity converts skeptics.

- 1 Score fat cap in crosshatch pattern. Fold each piece into a C-shape with fat facing out and skewer through the fold.
- 2 Apply generous coat of coarse rock salt to fat cap only. No marinade — ever.
- 3 Grill fat-side first at 240°C for 5 minutes to render, then rotate every 3 minutes to desired doneness.
- 4 Rest skewer off fire for 2 minutes before tableside service.
- 5 At table: hold skewer vertically, slice thin against the grain. Let the fat run over the cut. The theatre is part of the dish.

Chef's Tip: Picanha is your identity dish. Never serve beyond medium — the fat becomes waxy at well-done. If a guest insists on well-done, politely educate: "The fat loses its flavour above medium. May I show you what we recommend?" Most guests will convert.

- 1 Marinate fraldinha in chimichurri for minimum 4 hours. Overnight preferred for deeper penetration.
- 2 Pat dry before skewering — wet meat steams, not sears.
- 3 Grill at 220°C for 5–6 min per side for medium-rare. Rest 2 minutes off heat.
- 4 Slice thin against the grain in long diagonal cuts. Serve with chimichurri on the side.

Chef's Tip: Fraldinha has prominent grain — cutting with it makes it tough and chewy. Against the grain at a 45° angle is non-negotiable. Train every carver on this visually before service.

Costela ★ Signature

- 1 09:00 sharp: season ribs generously with salt and pepper. Load into slow cooker with garlic and bay leaves at 120°C.
- 2 Cook 7 hours uncovered. The connective tissue must fully convert to gelatin — no shortcuts.
- 3 At service: rest ribs 15 min, then finish on live fire for 6–8 min with smoke chips for char and colour.
- 4 Portion bone-in, 1–2 ribs per serve. Present on wooden board tableside.
- 5 The meat should pull away with no resistance. If it doesn't, it's not ready. 30 more minutes — never rush costela.

Chef's Tip: Costela is your most talked-about dish. When it runs out, it's gone — build scarcity into your service narrative. "We only do 14 portions of costela each evening" creates anticipation and drives early orders.

Linguiça — Brazilian Pork Sausage

- 1 Score sausage skins lightly — prevents burst and allows smoke penetration.
- 2 Grill over medium-high heat 200°C, turning every 2 minutes for even colour. Total 8–10 minutes.
- 3 Rest 1 minute. Slice on the bias into 4–5 thick coins per portion.
- 4 Plate with Brazilian mustard and fresh bread on the side.

Chef's Tip: Linguiça is the crowd-pleaser and volume driver. Push it to tables waiting for slow cuts — keeps energy up and prevents impatience while costela or cordeiro finishes.

Rest lamb at room temperature 30 minutes before cooking. Cold meat on hot grill seizes.

Season with salt and olive oil. Press rosemary-garlic crust onto fat side.
- 3

Sear crust-side down at 250°C for 3 minutes, then grill bone-side 4 minutes per side for medium-rare.

Rest off heat 3 minutes. Internal target: 57°C for medium-rare.
- 5

Present on wooden board with mint yogurt sauce, dramatic bone-up.

Chef's Tip: Cordeiro is the table status dish. When a neighbouring table sees it go out bone-up, they order one. Carry it out high, visible, dramatic. Theatre sells it before the flavour does.

Pat salmon completely dry. Oil the grill grates before placing fish — salmon sticks to dry grates.

Season skin side with salt, flesh with white pepper and dill.
- 3

Grill skin-down at 190°C for 6 minutes without moving. Flip once for 2 minutes.

Finish with lime squeeze. Rest 1 minute. Plate skin-up over farofa crumble.

Chef's Tip: Don't move salmon once placed — the skin will naturally release when it's ready to flip. Forcing it tears the skin and ruins presentation.

1 What is cachaça: Cachaça is Brazilian sugarcane spirit — distilled directly from fresh sugarcane juice (not molasses like rum). The result is greener, more vegetal, and more complex than white rum. The Caipirinha is Brazil's national cocktail. It is not a mojito. The crushed ice is structural — it dilutes and chills simultaneously as you drink.

2 Muddle properly: Quarter the lime (skin on), place in a rocks glass. Add sugar. Muddle firmly — you want to extract the juice AND express the oils from the skin. The lime oil from the skin is what gives the Caipirinha its aromatic complexity. Do not strain — the lime pieces stay in the glass.

3 Build and serve: Add crushed ice to fill the glass. Pour cachaça over. Stir 5–6 times from the bottom. The drink should be cloudy from the lime juice and slightly sweet with the tartness of fresh citrus. Serve immediately — crushed ice dilutes quickly. Suggest with any of the grilled meats: "The lime in the Caipirinha cuts through the beef fat perfectly."

1 The accessible version: The Caipiroska replaces cachaça with vodka — same technique, cleaner flavour profile. Guests who find cachaça too vegetal or unfamiliar will default to the Caipiroska. Always offer both: "We have the classic with cachaça — Brazil's national spirit — or the vodka version if you prefer something cleaner."

2 Fruit variations: Add 30g fresh strawberry, passion fruit pulp, or mango to the muddle for a fruit Caipiroska. Muddle fruit with the lime and sugar before adding vodka. Fruit variations are your highest-selling cocktail option for groups — colourful, Instagram-friendly, and easy to batch for large tables.

3 Large group strategy: For tables of 6+, offer a Caipiroska pitcher ($45.99) — built in a large jug, serves 4. The pitcher reduces service time dramatically during a busy rodizio service and increases cocktail revenue per table by 40% over individual orders.

What is guaraná: Guaraná is a Amazonian berry with a natural caffeine content twice that of coffee. Guaraná Antarctica is Brazil's best-selling soft drink — sweet, slightly fruity, with a distinctive flavour that is completely unlike any Western soft drink. It has been Brazil's answer to Coca-Cola since 1921.

Serve cold: Store at 4°C or below. Serve over ice in a branded or heavy-bottomed glass. The bright green can/bottle on the table is a visual brand signal — if Brazilian diners see it, it communicates authenticity immediately. Do not decant into a generic glass.

The discovery script: "Have you had guaraná before? It's Brazil's most popular soft drink — it's made from an Amazonian berry, naturally caffeinated. It's not like anything you've tried." For non-drinkers and families, this is your cultural soft drink story. Stock it — Brazilian guests will notice immediately if you don't carry it.

Fresh vs frozen: Fresh passion fruit (maracujá) when in season produces the most intensely aromatic juice. Frozen passion fruit pulp — available from Latin American grocery suppliers year-round — is an excellent substitute and produces consistent results. Never use flavoured cordial or syrup; the real fruit flavour is categorically different.

Build to order: Combine 80ml passion fruit pulp with cold water and simple syrup in a shaker with ice. Shake briefly. Strain into a tall glass over fresh ice. Taste and adjust sweetness — passion fruit acidity varies significantly by batch. The drink should be tart-forward with floral sweetness, not candy-sweet.

Garnish impact: Float a halved passion fruit on the rim of the glass — the seed-filled interior faces up. The visual of the fresh fruit cross-section communicates freshness instantly. This drink pairs beautifully with the lighter churrasco items and is the best non-alcoholic pairing for desserts.

Brazilian lager culture: Brazilians drink their beer extremely cold — so cold the glass is often frosted and the beer is almost at freezing point. This is not a quirk; the heat and richness of churrasco demands it. A beer served at 8–10°C in a warm glass will be gone from your table within minutes of the meat arriving.

Frosted glass protocol: Store pint or lager glasses in a dedicated freezer section. A glass that has been in the freezer for 2+ hours will have a visible frost coating. Present bottle and frosted glass together — open at the table. The visual of frost on the glass communicates that you understand how this culture drinks.

Pair with the rodízio: "The lager cuts through the fat in the picanha and the lamb beautifully — this is how Brazilians drink at a churrasco." This script is honest, accurate, and sells the next beer before the first one is finished. Target: 2 beers per guest average over a 90-minute rodízio service.

- 1 Brazilian coffee culture: Brazil is the world's largest coffee producer. Brazilian coffee is characterised by low acidity, full body, and nutty-chocolate flavour notes. Source a Brazilian single-origin bean if possible — Santos or Sul de Minas are widely available in the US. Roast: medium-dark. The story of Brazilian coffee origin adds value to every cup you sell.
- 2 Café com leite: The classic Brazilian breakfast drink — equal parts strong espresso and steamed whole milk. Ratio: 1:1 espresso to milk, served in a large ceramic cup. Not a latte, not a flat white — denser, stronger, with less foam. The milk should be steamed to 65°C with microfoam texture.
- 3 Post-meal sell: Always suggest coffee after the dessert course: "Can I get you a café brasileiro to finish? We use Brazilian single-origin beans." The coffee sell at the end of a meal is a low-resistance upsell — guests are relaxed, full, and receptive. A coffee also extends the table's stay by 15–20 minutes, increasing the chance of an extra dessert or digestif order.

- 1 Why Malbec with churrasco: Malbec is South America's most important red wine grape — grown primarily in Argentina's Mendoza region, adjacent to Brazil's churrasco culture. The grape produces wines with dark fruit (plum, blackberry), soft tannins, and a richness that pairs naturally with grilled beef fat. It is the most geographically and culturally authentic wine choice for a Brazilian churrasco menu.
- 2 Serving temperature: Malbec should be served at 16–18°C — slightly below room temperature. Do not refrigerate red wine. If the restaurant is air-conditioned below 20°C, the bottle can be stored at room temperature. For warm climates, a brief 15-minute refrigeration period brings it to ideal serving temperature.
- 3 The pairing script: "For the picanha and the beef ribs, I'd suggest the Malbec — it's from Argentina, which is right next door to Brazil. The tannins are soft enough that they enhance the beef fat rather than fighting it. It's one of the best wine pairings for churrasco there is." This script sells on geography, culture, and flavour simultaneously.

Coconut water in Brazilian culture: Água de coco is sold on every beach in Brazil — it is as culturally embedded as beer. For non-drinkers and health-conscious guests, it is the natural alternative that doesn't feel like a compromise. Coconut water's natural electrolytes also make it genuinely functional during a long churrasco meal with high salt intake from the meats.

Fresh vs packaged: Fresh young coconut served in the shell is the premium option ($7.99) — dramatic visual, authentic experience. Packaged coconut water (Vita Coco, Harmless Harvest) is the efficient option for high-volume service. Offer both tiers on the menu — different price points, different experiences.

Position as a health choice: "The coconut water is great with the rodízio — it's naturally hydrating, no sugar added, and it balances the salt from the meats. We get it from [supplier]." Health positioning works well in the US market. Guests who order coconut water tend to spend more on food — they are typically in the health-conscious, higher-income demographic.

Section 5 — Service Scripts

These scripts are frameworks — not recitations. Deliver them naturally, with eye contact. A script that sounds like a script is worse than no script at all.

SCRIPT 01 - WELCOME + CAIPIRINHA UPSELL

"Welcome to [Restaurant Name] — I'm [Name] and I'll be taking care of you this evening. Before I run you through tonight's menu, can I start you off with a Caipirinha? It's Brazil's national cocktail — we make ours to order with fresh lime and traditional cachaça. It's the best way to set the mood for what's coming. For those who prefer vodka, we do a Caipiroska with the same ceremony."

[Pause. Make eye contact. Let them decide — don't rush.]

"We also have Guaraná Antarctica — Brazil's famous soft drink, if you've never had it, it tastes like nothing else. And fresh coconut water straight from the fridge."

SCRIPT 02 - PICANHA EXPLANATION + SKEWER HEIGHT TECHNIQUE

"This is our Picanha — it's the most celebrated cut in Brazil, and arguably our signature dish. It's the top sirloin cap, cooked with nothing but coarse rock salt over live fire. The fat cap is everything — it renders into a golden crust that bastes the meat as it cooks."

[Hold skewer vertically, blade facing down-and-away from guest.]

"I'll slice it thin from the skewer directly onto your plate — just like they do it in São Paulo's churrascarias. Hold your hand palm-down when you'd like me to stop, palm-up when you'd like more. How would you like your picanha — medium-rare is how our chef recommends it, to keep that fat alive."

SCRIPT 03 - FEIJOADA FRIDAY PRE-SELL (THURSDAY EVENING)

"Before you go tonight — I want to let you know that tomorrow is Feijoada Friday. It's our most anticipated event of the week. Feijoada is Brazil's national dish — a slow-simmered black bean and pork stew that we start at 11am and cook for hours. It comes with rice, farofa, collard greens, and fresh orange slices. It's the kind of meal that makes people cancel their Saturday morning plans."

[Light pause, let it land.]

"We only make a limited batch, and Friday evening sells out by 7pm. If you're thinking about coming back — and I hope you are — Friday afternoon is the moment."

SCRIPT 04 - DESSERT PITCH - BRIGADEIRO + PUDIM

"Can I tell you about dessert before you decide you're too full? Two things I'd be doing you a disservice not to mention."

"First — our Brigadeiro. It's Brazil's most beloved sweet: a condensed milk and chocolate truffle, rolled in sprinkles. Three pieces. Our kitchen makes them fresh every morning. They're small enough that they won't wreck you, but memorable enough that you'll think about them on the way home."

"Second — the Pudim de Leite. It's a condensed milk flan with a live caramel that cascades when we invert it at the table. Silky, not heavy. It's the kind of dessert that makes the whole table go quiet."

[Don't ask 'would you like dessert?' — ask which one.]

"Shall I bring one of each for the table, or are you team Brigadeiro or team Pudim?"

SCRIPT 05 – BILL + RETURN VISIT INVITATION

"It's been a pleasure having you tonight. Before I bring the bill — I want to make sure you know about a few reasons to come back."

"Fridays we do Feijoada — limited, always sells out. We also rotate the premium cuts on weekends, and we occasionally do special churrasco evenings with the full gaucho ceremony."

[Present bill with both hands. Make eye contact.]

"I hope the fire treated you well tonight. We'd love to see you again — and if you bring someone new to Brazilian food, we promise they'll leave converted."

[If there's a card/loyalty system: mention it here naturally, not as a transaction.]

// MARGIN PROTECTION RULES

- Food cost must be reviewed weekly — not monthly. Drift compounds fast.
- Picanha and cordeiro are your highest-revenue mains. Portion them with scales, not by eye.
- Farofa (10% FC) and vinagrete (9% FC) are margin lifters — push them as paid sides aggressively.
- Drinks represent pure margin opportunity. A table that orders caipirinha rounds outperforms a table that only orders mains.
- Labour spikes on Fridays — feijoada prep adds kitchen hours. Account for this in weekly scheduling.

Kitchen Safety Non-Negotiables

- Fire discipline: Churrasco fires must never be left unattended. Assign a dedicated fire-keeper during all service periods.
- Skewer safety: All tableside carving performed with skewer pointed down and blade angled away from

- guests. No exceptions.
- 3 Poultry temps: Frango and coração de frango must reach internal 74°C. Thermometer at grill station at all times.
- 4 Cross-contamination: Separate chopping boards for all protein types. Colour-coded system enforced — never improvised.
- 5 Allergen escalation: Any guest reporting an allergy goes straight to the head chef. Servers do not make allergen assurances independently.
- 6 Cold chain: All proteins stored below 4°C. Costela braise checked at 2-hour intervals. Desserts set in dedicated refrigerator, not mixed with raw prep.
- 7 EOD log: Temperatures, waste, and incidents logged every close. No log, no close sign-off.

// FINAL WORD FROM THE KITCHEN

Every guest who sits at your table is trusting you with their time and their money. In a city full of options, they chose Brazilian Churrasco tonight. That choice is a gift — don't waste it on a lukewarm dish, an under-rested skewer, or a server who couldn't describe the cut they were carving.

This guide exists because the details matter. The 7-hour costela. The skewer height. The caipirinha offer made with confidence. The brigadeiro offered with the bill. None of it is accidental. All of it is craft.

Execute with fire. Execute with pride.

— Bem-vindo ao churrasco. Welcome to the fire.
